WHAT MILADY WEARS

IN A SEASON when frocks for all occasions seem to have as many frills and tucks and plaits as they can conceivably carry, women's footgear preserves the balance as being absolutely devoid of any buckles or bows or straps to mar the line of the foot. That many of the shoes appear very dressy is due to the clever combination of several shades or varieties of leather. This is worn rather effectively by Mrs. Robert Kelso Cassatt. Her hat is of navy blue taffeta, trimmed with large flowers. Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury, who is able to be about again, has adopted for morning wear a good-looking two-piece suit of dark blue and white roughly woven cloth in a large check. The skirt is quite plain, with the exception of a few plaits set in at the side, and the short jacket is given distinction by a belt and collar of white cloth, the latter of which also forms the crown of her large rolling brimmed black sailor hat.

An extremely smart coat suit of gage-green cloth is being worn by Miss Anna B. Gilpin. Both the skirt, which is rather narrow, and the short jacket are trimmed with a succession of tiny stitched-down plaits running perpendicular to the weave of the cloth. Miss Gilpin's hat is a small, close-fitting, dark-green straw, trimmed solely with two furring quilts. One of its little belted sports suit gravitas most becoming to Miss Mary Denckla. It is made of old-rose cloth in a rough weave, and with it is worn a smart black hat of straw and taffeta. Her Walter Waring Hopkins was observed in the square the other day in company with Miss Esther Jean Sochman, both looking very attractive in navy blue serge coat suits, with white fur. Miss Sochman's suit was girlishly belted and piped with white, and her hat was of white hemp.
